Local socio-economic development of rural municipalities of Lower Pollog presents a need for democratic development and transition in local self-government. When we are speaking about municipalities we are thinking about communes that in our case presents inhabited places consisted by families, neighborhoods, sections, institutions, enterprises and different sectors. All municipalities whenever they are present a complex system. They are alive, developing, growing, they have successes and failures. The objective of this research is to promote new way of thinking. To analyze processes that stimulate the municipality for collation among different sectors, initiate a new way of planning of resources for future generations. To science is known that the population is growing, people look for new qualities of life and resources are sufficient. This issue is closely related to other issue of fulfilling the needs of community: economic, education, health, social needs or needs for drinking water, transport, recreation etc.

The way how municipality is fulfilling the needs creates a new field of planning and determination of priorities for the municipality. Which issues are vital ones and which are secondary. After this comes the action that needs to be taken by the municipality in order to set a strategy for resolving these in the future. Main idea is that next generations to have better life, to support transition, decentralization, development human resources and rural development.
